

The World is in Crisis

Social, economic, and environmental challenges and injustices have grown to such a degree that informed, large-scale, grassroots action is needed.

In Saybrook University's Transformative Social Change programs, you will learn how to contribute to civil society advocacy to make positive change in the world.

“Taking part in the program in Transformative Social Change keeps me hopeful in these troubled times.”

—Jayanti Tambe, Transformative Social Change Student

The Learning Model

Saybrook has been an innovator in distance learning since the '70s. The majority of coursework is conducted online, so students can live and work anywhere in the world as they engage faculty and peers. In addition, Saybrook offers residential conferences where students and faculty have the opportunity to meet, interact, and build professional and personal relationships.

Guided by faculty with years of research and advocacy experience, students will learn how to design strategies that will lead to social transformation.
